The Gatekeeping Expert's Dilemma

Shunsuke Matsuno

Abstract. In many economic settings, an expert with superior information acts as a gatekeeper (gatekeeping experts). The gatekeeper influences agents through veto power and communication. But the gatekeeping expert faces a dilemma: precise communication may let others exploit the information and weaken her gatekeeping power. How transparent should a gatekeeping expert be? The paper studies this question in the context of financial auditing, where an expert auditor decides whether to accept a manager's financial report. I show that the auditor can use deliberately vague language to share her expertise without compromising her gatekeeping power. The auditor's independence and expertise determine the equilibrium amount of information she communicates, and these relationships can be non-monotonic. This paper contributes to our understanding of the economic tension between information sharing and gatekeeping.
